

A SERMON ON CO-OPERATION

By F. Buckley McGurrian.
He drove like a demon.
He approached like an Apache.
His putting was perfect.
Many trophies graced his mantel piece.
His golf clothes were a joy to behold.
But socially, he was non-existent:
He couldn't do a figure eight on skates.

She wore the cutest skating costume in town.
She was a dream of daintiness.
She floated over the ice like vagrant thistle.

down.
On skates, she was a winter wind.
But in spite of this, she was not among those present:
She didn't know a brassy from a jigger.

He married her.
The dining table moved up to the attic.
The first floor became a skating rink.
The furnace landed in the ash pile.
And in the basement was an indoor golf course.
They got together, earnestly.
And the next year they took the town by storm.
